This is the seventh volume of History at Lehigh, the official newsletter of the Department of History at Lehigh University. History at Lehigh is published twice per year in an effort to maintain contact and share information with students, alumni, and faculty. Please let us know if you have information or updates you would like to appear in future issues of History at Lehigh.

The department is proud to welcome as its newest member Dr. Joanna Michlic, who will join us as an Associate Professor. In addition to her membership in the History Department, Joanna will be affiliated with the Berman Center for Jewish Studies and will hold the Apted Chair for Holocaust Studies and Ethical Values.

Joanna is a social historian specializing in Polish-Jewish relations during and after the Second World War and in the memory of Jews in post-Holocaust Eastern Europe. She is also interested in theories of nationalism and ethnicity, particularly the role of symbols and beliefs in interethnic relations between dominant nations and ethnic minorities. Her book Poland's Threatening Other: The Image of the Jew from 1880 to the Present was recently published by University of Nebraska Press, and she co-edited/co-authored Neighbors Respond: the Controversy about Jedwabne (Princeton 2004). Her most recent work is entitled The Social History of Jewish Children in Poland: Survival and Identity, 1939-1949.

Due to her various interests, Joanna views an interdisciplinary approach as a “stimulus to innovation” rather than a challenge. She says she looks forward to “organizing cross-interdisciplinary seminars and other events not only with my colleagues from the History Department, but also with colleagues from Departments of Religion, Literature, Philosophy, Social Sciences, Engineering and other disciplines.” Joanna says she was attracted to the department “by its record of scholarship, its range of scholarly interests and its interdisciplinary approach to the study of history, which is reflected in the courses it offers to students,”

History students will have the opportunity to study with Joanna this fall in her classes “The Holocaust: History and Meaning” and “Genocide and Mass Murder in the 20th Century.” The latter course is open to graduate students as well as undergraduates.

Faculty

* Stephen Cutcliffe served as Chair of the Nanotechnology session at the annual meeting of the International Association of Science, Technology, and Society in February 2007. The session also included a presentation by Sharon Friedman of the Department of Journalism and Communications, on her current research, entitled, "Nanotechnology Risk Coverage in the Media."

* Michelle LeMaster presented “I am a Man and a Warrior: Native and European Rhetorics of Manhood and Warfare in the Colonial Southeast” at the Omohundro Institute of Early American History and Culture Colloquium in February. She also delivered “‘A Fort for the Protection of Your Women and Children: Women and War on the Colonial Southeastern Frontier” at a Brown Bag Lunch Seminar in March.

* John Savage is co-organizing a two-day workshop on the theme of “Napoleon’s Atlantic” at the Université de Toulouse Le Mirail in Toulouse, France this coming June. He will present a paper and make comments at the workshop. John will also present a paper and comment on a film about slavery in Martinique at the annual French Colonial Historical Society meeting in La Rochelle, France. He is on the North American program committee for the conference. John will follow up his conference trips with research in Paris during the rest of June.

* John Peetegrew and Ziad Munson of the Sociology and Anthropology department led a seminar entitled “Action, Tradition, and the Practice of American Democracy,” in preparation for a visit from political philosopher Jeffrey Stout during Inauguration Week. John also interviewed Professor Stout at the inaugural symposium on research and its global impact following Stout’s lecture.

Graduate Students

* Silas Chamberlin contributed four entries on technology and industry to the Encyclopedia of the Early Republic and Antebellum America, 1787-1861 (M.E. Sharpe, forthcoming).

* Tiffany Fisk-Watts catalogued over 200 goggles and artifacts at the Goggle Works Center for the Arts in Reading. As a colonial interpreter, Tiffany also contributed to the recent PBS special Communities: Bethlehem and appeared on promotional billboards. Dr. John Smith also appeared in the broadcast.
Mike Pietsa supervised the relocation and preservation of a pair of century-old, steam-powered hoisting engines. The 15 and 20 ton engines are being moved to the National Museum of Industrial History in the former Bethlehem Steel mill.

Department News and Announcements

Brown Bag Lunch Seminar-Spring 2007

This semester’s Brown Bag Colloquium has welcomed a variety of speakers from around Lehigh, Bethlehem, and the east coast. Noel Poirier, Director of Collections and Public Programming for the Historic Bethlehem Partnership presented “Being History: Benefits and Pitfalls of First-Person Historical Interpretation.” Dr. Constance Putnam discussed early American medicine in a presentation entitled, “Why Does Benjamin Rush Get All the Press?”

Ken Woodcock (Lehigh B.S. 1965) delivered “Historic House Museum Development: the Contagious Nature of Historic Preservation.” Kate Meiman and Michelle LeMaster also presented at spring Brown Bags. The Brown Bag Lunch Colloquium Series is sponsored by the History Department and the Science, Technology, and Society Program. Brown Bags provide a relaxed and informal atmosphere for scholars both within Lehigh and outside to present their work and engage in constructive discussions. Please join us this coming semester for the fall Brown Bag Colloquium, and if you have any presentation ideas please contact Dr. Kim Carrell-Smith at kwcs@lehigh.edu.

The Lawrence Henry Gipson Institute for Eighteenth-Century Studies sponsored two talks in March. Dr. Catherine Kelly, from the University of Oklahoma, presented “Black and White in Miniature: Gender, Race, and Portraiture in the Early American Republic,” and Dr. Stephen Craig Harper, a 2001 Lehigh Ph.D., delivered “Making History: Documenting the Walking Purchase.”

Katharine Paine and Jennifer Schappert were both awarded the George D. Harmon Award for highest achieving graduating history major.

Congratulations to Stephanie Lynn Balavitch, Grace Behe, Amanda Daddona, Nicole D’Elia, Daniel Huang, Emily Iwan, Michael King, Alexandra Mulrow, Elisabeth Oren, Joseph Pepe, and Troy Romanowski who recently became members of Phi Alpha Theta, the history honor society.
